Figures Don't Lie.

It doesn't take much knowledge of mathematics to figure out the facts about that dread disease—consumption. Statisticians long ago demonstrated that one-seventh of all the deaths in Christendom each year may be safely attributed to consumption and allied diseases.

There is an almost certain cure and a positive preventive for this fatal disease if taken in time. The story of what it will do is told in the following letter:

"About two and a half years ago, when I was at Flat Lick, Ky., writes J. W. Jordan, Esq. of Corbin, Whitley Co., Ky., 'I was taken with severe pains in the chest, after which I began to spit up blood and was also troubled with night sweats. I was so short winded that I could hardly walk half a mile at once, and if I got the least bit winded, I would have an attack of phthisis (asthma) and almost die for about two or three days. I concluded to try Dr. R. V. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He wrote me that I should take his Golden Medical Discovery. I began using it and used about six bottles. I began to see that it was helping me, so concluded to continue its use. I did so and have improved both in strength and in weight. I have not had the phthisis, nor spit up any blood since last spring.'"

This great remedy—Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—cures 98 per cent. of all laryngeal, bronchial, throat and kindred affections which, if neglected, lead up to consumption. It strengthens the stomach and makes the appetite keen and hearty. It invigorates the liver and aids the natural processes of secretion and excretion. It makes the assimilation of the food perfect. It is the great blood-maker and flesh-builder. Honest dealers will not urge you to take a substitute said to be "just as good." Send for Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. FREE. Enclose 21 one-cent stamps to cover mailing only, to The World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., for a paper-covered copy. Cloth binding, ten cents extra. It is a thousand page book with over seven hundred illustrations, formerly sold for $1.50. For limited time can be had for cost of mailing.

TAMED THE JOCKEYS.

THE MIDGETS EACH HAD A BAD CASE OF SWELLED HEAD.

A Spanking Over a Waiter's Knee Cured One, and an Unceremonious Tumble Into the Ocean Took the Insolence Out of the Other.

"It is a notorious fact," said an old horseman, "that successful jockeys are more afflicted with the big head than any other class of midgets you're liable to meet up with. On two occasions that I recall I've seen American waiters take prominent American jockeys down when the latter have become insufferable in their conduct. Some years ago an eastern jockey whose fame was spread broadcast throughout the racing world was taking dinner with a party of foolishly idolatrous friends at the Cliff House, outside of San Francisco. The jockey had been riding during the winter racing in and around San Francisco, and on this day he had won the swell event of the year on a rather no account horse. Consequently his hat was a whole lot too small for him.

"He was an insulting little chap at best, but on this occasion he simply let his tongue run away with his brains. His humor took the turn of joshing an old time waiter at the Cliff House who had been in California since the days of the Argonauts. The old man had long side whiskers, and the jockey made sundry and divers remarks to the waiter about the opportunity he was giving to the wind by wearing whiskers of that particular length, and the old man took the talk good naturedly without paying much attention to the touch of nastiness in the midget's remarks. Finally, however, when the wine had gone around pretty freely, the jockey reached up behind his chair as the old waiter was in the act of performing some little service for the men at the table, and, twisting his hand in the hair on one side of the old waiter's face, he deliberately pulled out a fairly large handful of the latter's whiskers.

"The old man leaped back with pain and indignation, the jockey laughing at him idiotically. Then the waiter coolly lifted the jockey out of his chair by the scruff of the neck, sat down and calmly deposited the midget across his knees, face downward.

"Son," said the waiter, 'there's something that you've stood in need of for a long time past, judging from your actions here during the past few months, and that something you're about to get and get good,' and he brought the palm of an ample hand down with a smack that sounded very pleasant indeed unto the ears of all the rest of the people in the room (except the jockey's friends) who had seen the beard pulling incident. Then he brought both hands into play, and the rataplan told of splendid execution. The jockey kicked and struggled, but he couldn't break loose, and he had to take his medicine. Then his friends at the table jumped to his rescue, and, quickly letting the jockey slide on to the floor, the old waiter, thoroughly aroused, jumped up and knocked them down one after the other. He just polished them all off in detail, and when he had got through with them he stood his ground. Then the manager appeared on the scene, and when he was told by a number of other guests, prominent men, what had happened he assisted in kicking the party out of the house.

"Another time a jockey who leaped into prominence with meteoric speed by reason of his winning two of the great events of the eastern turf in quick succession got the worst of it at the hands of a Coney Island waiter. I saw the incident myself. The jockey had had such a mighty accession of the 'I am it' spirit that he considered he could perform all sorts of mean little tricks at the expense of all hands and do the same with impunity. On this day he had won three straight races, and his imperiousness was something monumental. He took dinner with three bookmakers on one of the big Coney Island piers. The man who waited on the party was a bullet head, but a quiet, attentive man at that. He was removing some plates after the second course when the jockey picked up a siphon of seltzer and deliberately squirted half the bottle full in the waiter's face. The waiter wiped his face and his shirt front off with his table towel and then he walked up to the jockey's chair and said: "Have you had yer dip in de sea yet t'day, Freddy?"

"No," said the jockey, with an expression of surprise on his face, as if he wondered what was coming. "I thought not," said the bullet headed waiter. 'Dat's de reason I'm goin' t' let you have it now.' "Then the waiter suddenly picked the famous jockey up, and before any of the men at the table could interfere he carried him over to the railing of the pier and dropped the midget horse rider into the water, about 15 feet below.

"I just want t' see if de little snoozer wit' de swelled nut kin swim as well as he kin ride a horse," said the waiter, quietly watching the jockey come to the surface and strike out. The jockey could swim, and he made the beach without any trouble, but he didn't return to the pier."—Washington Star.

Missing Time.

What do people do with their surplus time? They used to weave the cloth their garments were made of and make them by hand. They now get them ready made at the stores. It takes less time to do every act of drudgery than it used to take. What becomes of the surplus time? If we have gained an hour over our ancestors, what becomes of it?—Aitchison Globe.

Music and Matrimony.

Captain Becker, an official of the Kongo Free State, won the affection of many of the natives in a very curious way. He bought a good loud playing barrel organ and allowed the natives to turn the handle. The captain was very anxious that the people should be married in accordance with the Christian religion, and when it was known the organ would be played at all such marriages the increase in the number of Christian weddings was remarkable. Things were generally arranged so that one wedding took place each day, in order that the organ might be heard regularly. It turned out afterward that several couples had been married twice, in order that the organ might be played at their nuptials.—Sussex News.

Preserved Soap Bubbles.

If one wishes to make soap bubbles which will last several days, prepare the following mixture in a room where the temperature is not lower than 65 degrees: Dissolve at a gentle heat one part of castile soap, previously cut into thin shavings, in 40 parts of water, distilled, if possible, and, when the solution is cold, filter it.

Having done this carefully, mix in a bottle by violent and persistent shaking, a little at a time, two parts of glycerin with three parts of the above mentioned solution of soap and allow it then to stand where it will not be in the way of dust. The liquid, which is at first clear, soon becomes turbid. After a few days a white precipitate will have risen to the top of the liquid, leaving the remainder clear. Draw off the clear portion with siphon (a bent tube) and keep it for use. To use a siphon it is necessary first to fill it and then to plunge the shorter arm into the liquid to be drawn off.

This mixture is called glycerin liquid. The film it forms is of such strength that a bubble four inches in diameter may be kept in the open air of a room for three hours if supported by a ring of iron or bone an inch and a half in diameter or allowed to rest on some soft woolen fabric. If placed under a glass shade, it may last as long as three days. If filled with tobacco smoke, it looks very much as if it were solid.—Boston Transcript.

Two Big Necks.

"Once, when I was in New York some years ago," said A. W. Whelpley, "I found myself one afternoon standing before a counter in one of that city's largest dry goods houses selecting some collars.

"A good many men sallied up while I was there and ordered collars of various sizes, from 13 to 18.

"I heard a full, rather hoarse voice, ask for 'turn down, 20.'"

"I turned to note the man with the thick neck and beheld Grover Cleveland beside me. I knew him by his resemblance to the fellow on the cigar boxes.

"I had been given my change and a small packet of wares by the auburn haired goddess of the counter, and with one more glance at the generous proportions of the man of destiny I was moving away when, strangely enough, the autocat of the house of congress, Tom Reed, came steaming up to the counter.

"There they stood, neither evidently knowing the proximity of the other.

"And bless me if he didn't ask for collars, 'second medium, welt band, turned front, 21!'"

"I wondered if he thought the store provided a surveyor for such monstrous measures, but the goddess was equal to the occasion and handed out the desired size."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Why Cannibals Eat Men.

Some gruesome information has been collected by a member of the European medical fraternity in relation to tribes that eat men. A Frenchman figures that 20 per cent of all cannibals eat the dead in order to glorify them; 10 per cent eat great warriors in order that they may inherit their courage and eat dead children in order to renew their youth; 10 per cent partake of their near relatives from religious motives, either in connection with initiatory rites or to glorify deities, and 5 per cent feast in order to avenge themselves upon their enemies. Those who devour human flesh because of famine are reckoned as 18 per cent.

In short, deducting all these there remains only a portion of 24 per cent who partake of human flesh because they prefer it to other means of aliment.

In the heart of Africa man eating is continued to this day, and to such an extent that in certain villages ribs and quarters of man meat can be bought. It is easier for the native there to kill men when they desire flesh than to go to the exertion of hunting game.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

DUTY OF LABOR ON SOCIAL QUESTION.

In the December number of the Railroad Trainmen's Journal the following extract appears in an editorial: "We have all prayed for the time when every social question would become a political question and that time is now 'up to us' and it is our business to take advantage of it."

There is no doubt about the correctness of the view taken by the editor upon social questions. There are questions of a social character that demand attention as political questions and when presented for political action they will receive the care they demand.

As social questions are chiefly in the hands of those who are directly interested in them no notice, such as their importance require, is given to any of them. These questions, in a sense politically, are not worthy of attention, or those who are personally interested in them fail in a duty they owe to themselves and their fellows who are equally interested, when they fail to present them for political action.

When presented they may be received in a lukewarm way, but that should not discourage those who are persuaded that action should be taken. The bosses will not submit to any interference with their plans by those who present for consideration a social question before a convention for two reasons, one of which is that they know nothing about such questions, and the other reason is that it is not a part of the business they have in hand.

The elevation of man is not in their political catalogue, and that being true, should it be expected in the order of things that social questions would receive their attention. When social questions become matters for public discussion in organized form they will receive attention worthy of the importance they sustain to the social system of the race, but until action is taken to give them form by those interested in them in a way that they can be presented for direct consideration they will continue in the back ground while matters of much less weight to the best interests of man and society are receiving the undivided attention of a nation.

The editor in the article from which the above quotation was taken says: "The Trainmen's Journal does not care a rap for either party * * * It makes no difference to the Journal whether the party be led by President McKinley or Colonel Bryan we are after results not parties."

We will not question the position of the Trainmen's Journal. It is supposed to be non-partisan in its action but the question remains for solution that is presented in the first extract by the position taken in the last quotation. It would be well for us who are in favor of bringing social questions to the front to know how it can be done without political party action in some form.

Has not the JOURNAL placed us in the position of "wait a while," when we should be at work giving our care and attention to the political side of social questions, that they may be placed where they should be to receive attention politically that their merits demand?

Should we remain passive, when the time is upon us that requires of each and all of us who are interested in bringing forward for political action the great question of labor?

Should we remain in a waiting position, that one of the political parties may gather us up and say, in some form, "God bless you," to cheer our waiting spirits, which is the position we will occupy so long as we remain inactive to a true relation in politics.

Labor is organized for its protection against the innovations and oppressive demands of capital, and in organization it receives protection. Should there be any sufficient cause to prevent labor from receiving additional protection through organized political action.

We believe there is no principle involved that is in opposition to organized action in politics by labor, but it is surely one of the best forms of organization to command attention to the demand of labor for that recognition politically to which it is entitled. We are of the opinion that the present passive state of labor may continue for centuries, unless there is additional work done in organized form to direct attention to it, as a power in the political field.

The intelligent politician is quick to ascertain a winning proposition, and he is equally as quick in his conclusion upon a question that is not properly before the people for his attention and action. The rights of labor in its various departments have received very little attention from the law-making power, while it is and will continue to be the question of all questions that demand attention. We do not mean a mere passing attention, but refer to a living and continued attention that will give to it the necessary protection its importance demands.
